 - (a) has an interest in the property the subject of the application; and
 - (b) has exercised reasonable care to ensure that the property is not terrorist property; and
 - (c) is not a member of a specified entity,

- (4) If the Court refuses to make a forfeiture order, the Court must make an order that describes the property and declares that it is not terrorist property.

25. Effect of forfeiture order

MEASURES TO COMBAT TERRORISM AND TRANSNATIONAL ORGANISED CRIME ACT 2005

EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM

With this legislation we endeavour to honour our obligations under the Nasonini Declaration, in that this Act seeks to give effect to a number of international instruments—

- the United Nations Security Council Resolution 1373, which deals with terrorist financing;
- eight of the 12 United Nations conventions and protocols on terrorist activities; and
- the Convention on Transnational Organised Crime, with its protocols on trafficking in persons and people smuggling.

Of the four remaining UN counter terrorism conventions, three are dealt with by the Aircraft Security Act 1990 and the fourth is dealt with by the Civil Aviation Act 2004.

The Act is divided into nine Parts. Part I deals with preliminary matters, including definitions. Section 3, in particular, defines the expression ‘terrorist act’.

Part II deals with specified entities. The term includes each person or group classified as a terrorist by the United Nations Security Council, unless the Attorney-General by regulation removes them from the list as it applies to Kiribati. The Attorney-General can apply to the Court for a declaration that a person or group not on the Security Council list should be declared a specified entity if there are reasonable grounds to believe the person or group is involved in terrorist activities. The Part sets out the procedure for applications and for revocation of declarations. All declarations must be reviewed periodically.

Part III sets out general offences relating to terrorist activity, including terrorism financing, provision of property or services to specified entities, dealing with terrorist property, harbouring of persons committing terrorist acts, provision of weapons to terrorist groups and recruitment of persons to be members of terrorist groups or to participate in terrorist acts. Generally, this is in line with the International Convention for the Suppression of the Financing of Terrorism.

Part IV deals with the management and forfeiture of terrorist property, and is divided into three Divisions.

Division 1 provides that on application by the Attorney-General, the Court can direct the Administrator (who is appointed under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2003) to take custody and control of terrorist property. Notice of a direction must be given to the person who owns or controls the property (if the person or the person’s representative is in Kiribati) and to anyone else the Attorney-General thinks may have an interest in the property. The Court can then vary or revoke the direction on application by the Attorney-General or the person who owns or controls the property. A direction is revoked automatically if the entity that owns it ceases to be a specified entity or if a forfeiture order is made for the property. An appeal against a direction lies to the Court of Appeal.

Division 2 provides for the Attorney-General to apply to the Court for a forfeiture order against terrorist property. Notice must be given to the persons known to own or control the property. The Court will direct how the notice is to be given and can order service of the application on anyone else the Court thinks has an interest in the property, and publication of notice of the application. Anyone who claims an interest is entitled to appear and present evidence at the hearing of the application.

The Court can order forfeiture of the property if it is satisfied, on the balance of probabilities, that it is terrorist property. The Court can also exclude the interests of persons from the order. Within six months of the making of an order, a person who claims an interest in the property and was not given notice of the application can apply to have that person's interest excluded from the order. The Attorney-General or any person affected by the Court's decision can appeal to the Court of Appeal.

Division 3 of Part IV requires a financial institution to inform the Financial Intelligence Unit if it knows or has reasonable grounds to suspect that any property it holds or controls is owned or controlled by a specified entity, or any dealings it has relate to the commission of a terrorist act. The Financial Intelligence Unit may share that information with equivalent authorities in other countries. However, information received can only be disclosed for law enforcement purposes.

Part V requires authorised officers (in this case, usually immigration officers) to prevent the entry of anyone reasonably suspected of involvement or planning of a terrorist act. The Minister responsible for immigration can order a person who is not a citizen to leave Kiribati on the same grounds.

Part VI provides for specific criminal offences under the counter terrorism conventions.

Division 1 deals with the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crimes Against Internationally Protected Persons, including Diplomatic Agents. It creates a special offence of attacking or threatening internationally protected persons, their official premises, private accommodation or means of transport.

Division 2 deals with the International Convention against the taking of Hostages. It creates an offence of taking a hostage to try to force a government, an international organisation or a person or group of persons to do something or not to do something.

Division 3 deals with the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material. It controls the movement of nuclear material in and out of Kiribati, requiring the written permission of the Minister responsible for transport. To get a licence or permit, the person must assure the Minister that the material will be protected at the levels required by the Convention. It is an offence to make a false statement or provide a false assurance. There are also a number of offences dealing with the use of nuclear material, where the fact that the material is nuclear makes the behaviour more dangerous because of the inherent risks involved.

Division 4 deals with the Convention for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Maritime Navigation and the associated Protocol for the Suppression of Unlawful Acts against the Safety of Fixed Platforms located on the Continental Shelf. It includes a number of offences covering damage or destruction of a ship or fixed platform, acts of violence or damage on or to them, damaging or interfering with navigational facilities, or endangering safe navigation by providing false information. The master of a ship is given power to arrest and detain a person suspected of committing one of the offences, and to hand the person over to the appropriate authorities of a state party to the Convention.

Division 5 deals with the Convention on the Marking of Plastic Explosives for the Purposes of Detection. Marking plastic explosives allows for them to be traced back to their last legitimate owner if they are used for terrorist activities. The Division creates offences of manufacturing, possessing, transporting, importing or exporting unmarked plastic explosives. There are limited circumstances in which their use may be permitted.

Division 6 deals with the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings. It provides offences for the use of explosives or other lethal devices in places that are accessible to the public, facilities or conveyances associated with government, public service or the judiciary, public transport services or public utility infrastructure.

Part VII addresses matters covered by the Convention on Transnational Organised Crime. It creates an offence of participating in an organised criminal group, and an offence of corruption, dealing with offering or taking bribes connected with official duties.

Part VIII deals with the Protocols on People Trafficking and People Smuggling under the Transnational Organised Crime Convention. It creates offences of engaging in people trafficking. Consent by the person being trafficked is not a defence. A trafficked person may be subject to removal from Kiribati, but is not to be punished for being the victim of trafficking. It also provides for offences of people smuggling, being involved in keeping smuggled people in Kiribati and dealing with fraudulent travel or identity documents. Additional penalties are provided if the subjects of people smuggling are treated badly or otherwise endangered. There is protection from prosecution for persons being smuggled, although only for offences involved with being the object of people smuggling. A commercial carrier is given the responsibility to make sure that people being transported have the necessary travel documents for lawful entry into the destination country. An authorised officer can stop and board craft to investigate suspicions of people smuggling.

Part IX sets out some general provisions to give effect to the legislation. A broad jurisdiction to prosecute is provided for, in line with the international expectation that those who commit terrorist acts shall be denied safe haven. In certain circumstances the Attorney-General must expressly consent to a prosecution. Offences under this Act are declared not to be political or fiscal offences, so that extradition or mutual assistance cannot be refused on those grounds. Also, bank secrecy cannot be relied on to refuse a request for mutual assistance. A body corporate can be guilty of an offence in the same way as an individual. The legislation also provides for controlled delivery, where an authorised officer who suspects that property may be involved in an offence can allow movement of the property as part of the investigation of suspected offences. There is a general reporting requirement for the operator of any craft arriving in or leaving Kiribati to give information to the Commissioner of Police about the persons or goods on board. This requirement extends to the operators of craft registered in Kiribati for each leg of their voyage. Finally, there is a general regulation-making power that includes power for the addition or removal of names of counter terrorism conventions listed the Schedule.

The Schedule lists the 12 international counter terrorism conventions and protocols.
